Quaker Businesses in Britain: a historical list

Quakers have long been involved in the world of commerce and were leading figures in the industrial revolution in Britain. Their success in business was partly based upon their reputation for honesty and integrity, and many Friends contributed to the later shape of currently accepted business practices, and for pioneering some aspects of industrial welfare. This guide is a selective list of Quaker businesses in Britain in existence from the seventeenth century onwards. Further information about British Quakers and their commercial and industrial activities can be found in:

The list of Quaker businesses in this Guide is arranged alphabetically by name of the firm. It gives dates when the firm was active, when known, the trade or industry and the main historical location of the business concerned. The firms included are ones primarily owned or controlled by members of the Society of Friends for a significant part of their existence. A number are also included where only one partner or family was a Friend, or where there was a long-standing, but not necessarily continuous, Quaker connection. This list of Quaker businesses has been compiled using the following sources, among others.
